"I also want to be very clear that we expect Iran to be very clear about what they are or aren't doing," Obama said. "If Iran is moving toward a weapon, we will hold them accountable." "I have ordered every measure available to us to hold Iran accountable, if they are developing a weapon. So I don't want Iran to get a nuclear weapon. I also don't want a nuclear weapon in my back yard," Obama said. "When I was first confronted with the issue of proliferation, my attitude was that somebody else should be racing to acquire a nuclear weapon, and we shouldn't have one." Photo by Alex

So it is a slight exaggeration.” Obama’s statement is a closely monitored part of his legacy campaign. His claim that the Iran deal would prevent Tehran from developing nuclear weapons is central to his view of the deal, even if his statement about it is not entirely accurate. For instance, on the day Obama made his announcement, North Korea announced that they had successfully produced their first nuclear weapon. “The deal slowed them down, but it didn’t stop them,” Luttwak said. “I’m not sure that was correct, and I’m not sure that was not correct,” he told me. “I’m not going to get into the semantics. He’s somewhat overselling, I would say, and that’s what I try to avoid in life,” Luttwak said. “Do I think we are safer from an Iranian nuclear bomb because of the
